Wendy Rogers is the founder and owner of Access At Home Physiotherapy, one of the region's largest providers of private in-home physiotherapy services. She and her outstanding team of registered physiotherapists treat clients with mobility, neuromuscular and musculoskeletal disorders in the privacy of their own homes, easing pressure upon expensive beds in hospitals and rehabilitation centers. Wendy's overarching goal is to provide superior client care and optimize functional outcomes.

Working in community settings, this group of professionals offers a wide spectrum of expertise: geriatrics, general rehabilitation and chronic disease management (Stroke, Chronic Obstructive Pulmonary Disease, Multiple Sclerosis, Parkinson's disease) to keep at-risk or injured individuals mobile, independent, healthy and focused on reaching their personal goals.

Since graduating from Dalhousie University, her 35 year career as a registered physiotherapist has spanned employment in the public and private health care sectors in Scotland, Australia and throughout Canada, all contributing to her extensive experience base. Professionally, Wendy is passionate about physiotherapy, continuing education, professional congresses and the exploration of global advances in treatment strategies while embracing a holistic approach to health management.

She and her husband, Neil, have two sons and a daughter who share her enthusiasm for travel, sport and volunteerism.
